

Scenarios

1. It's your brother's birthday party and he gets a lot of gifts from friends and family. You don't get anything. You are excited for him and the new things he received.
2. You race from the car to the door of the house and get there at the same time as your sister. You open the door and hold it for her to go in first.
3. Your sister spills a drink in the kitchen. You go over immediately to help her clean everything up.
4. There is only one remote for your new X-Box game. You play for 30 minutes and every five minutes your brother asks to play, but you just ignore him.
5. The phone rings and you race to answer it. You get there before your brother and then stick your tongue out at him.
6. Your brother gets an award for a science project. You are really proud of him and cheer for him when he is presented with the award.
7. There is one Coke left in the fridge and you hide it in the back and tell your brother there are no more, so you can drink it when he goes to practice later.
8. Your sister is on the playground at the same time as you and she has no one to play with. You go over and play with her.
9. Your brother gets invited to a birthday party, but you don't. You think you should be able to go, and pout when he leaves because you aren't allowed to go with him.
10. There is one cookie left from the batch your mom made. You go to take it, but your sister says she wants it, too. You break it in half and share it with her.
11. You win a prize at the arcade. It's a stuffed bear, and your little sister falls in love with it. You decide to give it to her because you know she would like it much more than you would.