

Life Examples

Your parents asked you to pick up your toys in the family room. You did not feel like doing it, so you didn't.	Your parents gave your brother a $10 bill for his birthday. You took it from his room one day because you wanted it.	Instead of spending any time alone with God, you chose to do something else, like play with your toy or read a book.
Your friend from school got the backpack that you really wanted. You cannot stop thinking about how much you want your friend's backpack.	You accidentally broke your teacher's mug when you were playing in the classroom before school started. Instead of telling her the truth, you tell her you don't know how it broke.	You go over to a classmate kiss him/her on the cheek, even though you know you aren't supposed to.
Your mom tells you it is time to go to church, but you tell her you want to stay home so you can play with your new toy.	You love watching Hannah Montana. In fact, you spend more time watching her on TV and playing with your Hannah Montana toys than you spend time with God.	You don't like your little sister because you think she gets what she wants all the time. You think about how much you do not like her and try to come up with ways that she could get in trouble.
You got a new toy for Christmas and love it. When your parents ask at night if you would like to sit down with them to read stories in the Bible, you tell them you'd rather play with your toy.

Life Examples

Your parents asked you to pick up your toys in the family room. You did not feel like doing it, so you didn't.	Your parents gave your brother a $10 bill for his birthday. You took it from his room one day because you wanted it.	Instead of spending any time alone with God, you chose to do something else, like play with your toy or read a book.
Your friend from school got the backpack that you really wanted. You cannot stop thinking about how much you want your friend's backpack.	You accidentally broke your teacher's mug when you were playing in the classroom before school started. Instead of telling her the truth, you tell her you don't know how it broke.	You go over to a classmate kiss him/her on the cheek, even though you know you aren't supposed to.
Your mom tells you it is time to go to church, but you tell her you want to stay home so you can play with your new toy.	You love watching Hannah Montana. In fact, you spend more time watching her on TV and playing with your Hannah Montana toys than you spend time with God.	You don't like your little sister because you think she gets what she wants all the time. You think about how much you do not like her and try to come up with ways that she could get in trouble.
You got a new toy for Christmas and love it. When your parents ask at night if you would like to sit down with them to read stories in the Bible, you tell them you'd rather play with your toy.		